

Authors / Auteurs

David Beers is founding editor of The Tyee (www.thetyee.ca) and is a lecturer at the University of British Columbia, School of Journalism.

Lorrie Blair is a professor in the Department of Art Education, Faculty of Fine Arts, Concordia University.

Frank Conibear is a teacher in the First Nations Leadership Program at Esquimalt High School District #61.

Nassira Hedjerassi is a professor in the Department of Educational Studies, Faculty of Psychology and Education, University Louis Pasteur, Strasbourg, France.

Deirdre M. Kelly is a professor in the Department of Educational Studies, University of British Columbia.

Stephen Kline is a professor in the School of Communication at Simon Fraser University.

Brett Lashua is currently a Research Associate at Cardiff University, School of Social Sciences. His research interests are in leisure, pop culture, music and soundscape, particularly as these inform questions of creativity, representation, and identities.

Diane Wishart Leard is a doctoral candidate in the Department of Educational Policy Studies, University of Alberta.

John Lyall is Kwakwaka'wakw from Gilford Island and is a teacher in the First Nations Graduation Program at the West Shore Centre for Teaching and Learning, School District #62. He is a graduate student in Aboriginal and Environmental education at the University of Victoria.

Ardiss Mackie teaches in the English as a Second Language Department, Faculty of Arts and Foundational Programs, Okanagan College.

Leanna Madill is a doctoral student in the Department of Curriculum and Instruction, Faculty of Education, University of Victoria. Her research interests include gender, popular culture, video games, and literacy practices.

Marcia McKenzie is a postdoctoral scholar in the Department of Educational Studies, Faculty of Education, University of British Columbia.

Corrine Michel is the Indigenization Project Coordinator at Camosun College. Her research interests are First Nations ways of teaching and learning, Indigenous methodologies, and environmental education.

David Murphy is a professor in the School of Communication at Simon Fraser University, teaching applied communication design in the Media Analysis Lab and the Sonic Research Studio.

Bonny Norton is a professor in the Department of Language and Literacy Education at the University of British Columbia.

Paul Orłowski is a UBC sessional instructor in both the Department of Educational Studies and the Department of Curriculum Studies. He is also a high school social studies teacher in Vancouver.

Stuart Poyntz is a doctoral candidate in the Department of Curriculum Studies, University of British Columbia.

Janet Riecken is a research assistant with the Knowledge Transfer Project involving the Centre for Youth & Society and the "Healthy Youth in a Healthy Society" Community Alliances for Health Research project.

Ted Riecken is a professor in the Department of Curriculum and Instruction, Faculty of Education, University of Victoria. His research focuses on Aboriginal education and youth engagement through participatory research and the use of digital technologies as tools for knowledge mobilization.

Kathy Sanford is a professor and Director, Teacher Education Programmes, Faculty of Education, University of Victoria.

Tish Scott is a graduate student in the Department of Curriculum and Instruction, Faculty of Education, University of Victoria. Her research interests include teaching and learning with educational technology, using technology to support and strengthen language and culture, online interactive curriculum development, health education, student motivation, assessment, evaluation, culture, and participatory research.

Michelle Stack is a professor in the Department of Educational Studies, University of British Columbia.

Kym Stewart is a doctoral student in Curriculum Theory and Implementation in the Faculty of Education at Simon Fraser University.

Suzanne Stewart (Batten) is from the Dene Nation. Her current doctoral research, in the Department of Educational Psychology & Leadership Studies at the University of Victoria, focuses on Indigenous mental health.

Teresa Strong-Wilson is an assistant professor in the Department of Integrated Studies in Education, McGill University. Her research interests are storied formation, narrative inquiry, Indigenous education, teacher education, and professional development.

Alexia Stumpf is a lecturer and a doctoral candidate in the Department of Educational Studies, Faculty of Psychology and Education, University Louis Pasteur, Strasbourg, France. Her main research focuses on school crisis and vocational aspects of teaching.

Michele Tanaka is a graduate student in the Department of Curriculum and Instruction, Faculty of Education, University of Victoria. Her research interests include Indigenous education, arts-based inquiry, teacher education, and professional development.

Charles Ungerleider is a professor of the sociology of education at UBC and Director of Research and Knowledge Mobilization for the Canadian Council on Learning.

Brian Wilson teaches sociology and cultural studies in the School of Human Kinetics at the University of British Columbia. His research interests include youth culture, mass and alternative media, social movements, and the sociology of sport and leisure generally.